European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker and U.S. President Donald Trump have agreed to extend a transatlantic trade pact to eliminate tariff barriers. The two leaders met on Wednesday (12 June) in Washington and agreed to renew the pact, which was signed by the former Commission President, Jose Manuel Barroso, and the U.S. President Barack Obama in 2008. Trump said in a statement that both sides would redouble efforts to conclude the agreement. "We discussed how to continue our economic and trade relationship as we embark on a very big and important phase of our economic relationship," Trump said. The two leaders reaffirmed their commitment to seeking a "better trading relationship," the White House said in a statement. "I believe that we have made good progress over the past two and a half years, and I am hopeful that we will be able to work together to resolve any outstanding differences before the end of the year," Trump said. Trade tensions The leaders also agreed to work on an agreement "on eliminating tariffs, non-tariff barriers, and other trade-related practices that restrict free trade." A trade war is brewing between Washington and Beijing and U.S. companies are increasingly worried about a future in which two superpowers dominate global trade and commerce. On Wednesday, Trump's daughter, Ivanka Trump, accompanied her father to the meeting. She tweeted later that the meeting was a "great discussion on economic growth 2d92ce491b
