Vietnam's state-run newspaper, Nhan Dan, posted an image of a message on a door which was left by the Vietnamese Security Force (VNDF) on the border with China. The message is written in Vietnamese and reads: "The VNDF have been guarding the border area for 10 years with our brother Vietnamese, the people of China. We cannot forget the relationship with the people of China for any reason." The message is signed by the so-called Vietnamese Security Force Battalion which consists of 150 men and is stationed at Nguanhan Port. The group is responsible for border security on China's northeastern border with Vietnam, according to Nhan Dan. On Aug 12, Vietnam and China ratified the Declaration on the Respect for the Border and the Movement of Personnel, Goods and Related Information across the Border. The agreement marks the return of the Vietnam-China border from the demilitarized zone to the river line. A Vietnam-China joint statement on Aug 23 said the two countries are committed to strengthening the long-standing and friendly diplomatic and people-to-people relationship and promoting cooperation in economy, trade and investment.Tax Shelter An investment promotion project (IPP) or tax shelter is a corporate structure used to minimize the tax burden and the rate of return on investment for a given client. IPPs can be used to reduce the shareholders' tax burden on corporate income. Tax shelters are based on section 337 of the US Internal Revenue Code, and an equivalent provision in the Japanese Income Tax Act. Although section 337 and the related Japanese tax provision were both passed in 1954, the term tax shelter was not coined until the early 1980s. Details The basic idea of a tax shelter is that one can construct a corporate structure where business income is moved into the shelter (often through incorporation) and outside the shelter with a tax-deductible expense. As long as the corporate tax rate is lower than the rate on the business income, a profit in the shelter is tax-deductible. The remainder of the profit (i.e. the portion not in the shelter) is taxed as ordinary income. IPPs take advantage of the provision that a corporation cannot deduct an expense in a year in which it made a profit. The corporation profits in the shelter, but the tax is deferred until they leave. This results in a higher rate of return, but not tax
