This is to prevent call that cannot take null as argument. The function looks like this public void checkNullArg(String s, List args){ for (String arg : args){ if (arg == null) throw new IllegalArgumentException(s + " has null argument"); } } I'm using "org.regexp.PatternBuilder" with a pattern looking like "(?s)(?.?)" I try to check if the string s is matched with my pattern Pattern regex = Pattern.compile("(?s)(?.?)"); And this works ok, i have matched s. But i want to check if my pattern will match with arg, not s. How to achive this? A: You can use.matches() method of java.lang.String to see if the whole string is matched by your pattern. If you want to check each argument separately, you can use regex like this ^(?:.(?.))?$ and use $1 to get the captured group. This theory was developed over a century ago for two-phase solidified alloys. There are some indications that scalar theory of elasticity is applicable to two-phase solidified alloys also in the liquid state. Here we investigate whether scalar theory of elasticity, which is valid for two-phase solidified alloys, can be applied also to the microstructure in a fluid layer that is heated from below. For that purpose, we compute the Poisson's ratio and the Young's modulus of the microst 2d92ce491b
