Musculoskeletal complications in lymphoma patients treated with rituximab. Musculoskeletal complications are frequently observed in patients receiving antineoplastic treatment. An important potential cause is direct toxicity of cytotoxic drugs and radiotherapy on bone and joint structures. Rituximab has been introduced as a promising, effective anti-lymphoma treatment. However, potential adverse effects on bone metabolism have been described. So far, the incidence of musculoskeletal complications in lymphoma patients treated with rituximab is unclear. In this study, we analysed the musculoskeletal complications in lymphoma patients treated with rituximab in our institution. In addition, the effects of rituximab on blood parameters that are relevant for bone metabolism were investigated. Seventy-two patients (41 male, 31 female) with diffuse large cell lymphoma (n = 40), follicular lymphoma (n = 20) and marginal zone lymphoma (n = 12) who received one or more cycles of rituximab as part of their standard therapy were included in this retrospective study. Patients were treated with 375 mg/m² of rituximab given weekly for 4 weeks and repeated every 6 months. Patients underwent clinical examination and blood sampling for assessment of serum concentrations of calcium, albumin and creatinine. Bone scintigraphy was performed before and after therapy in 17 patients. The incidence of musculoskeletal complications was 50%. Most frequently, pain and increased muscle bulk were observed. Prevalence of fractures was 3% (n = 2) of which one had severe sequelae. No differences were observed in incidence of musculoskeletal complications according to age, sex and tumour stage. There was no
