I see the vision. But when I try to implement it, am I implementing a good system or a wrong system? Frank Fisher: I would recommend to you that you leave this. You have what we call an incompetent manager. You are working with an incompetent. I got all that. The problem is, the past is. Ask for a subscription or purchase a product. Washington (CNN) In a move sure to cause a backlash from Republicans in Congress and across the country, President Donald Trump on Friday told House and Senate Republicans he wants a vote on repealing the Affordable Care Act, two sources familiar with the conversation told CNN. Trump delivered the message during a huddle with House and Senate GOP leaders in the White House Rose Garden, the sources said, explaining that the president sees an opportunity in Congress' newly formalized working relationship -- and that he has made it clear that he wants it to be on Capitol Hill. In the past, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell has taken the position that he wants to wait for a Senate vote to repeal and replace Obamacare, but that can't happen if the Senate can't pass a repeal bill with 51 votes. And the window for a Senate repeal vote, which was never expected to happen this year, is rapidly closing. "Right now," one source said, "if it were a major bill we could probably go through." A second source noted that McConnell wants a vote on a repeal of the law, but that the Senate leader "likes to wait." Read More Q: Python - compare two files and edit them So I have 2 text files and I'm trying to make a function where it compares the two files and if it finds a specific word in one of the files, it will replace that specific word in the second file, but it doesn't seem to work, even though I've tested it myself. Here's my code: word = input("What word do you want to find? ") def compare(): for line in open('Myfile1', 'r').readlines(): for line2 in open('Myfile2', 'r').readlines():
