Our study was designed to determine whether carbon dioxide (CO2) excretion can be detected in the urinary excretion of CO2 in patients with COVID-19, a novel coronavirus disease. A total of 24 hospitalized patients with COVID-19 were enrolled in this prospective study. The CO2 level in the urine was monitored for four days, and the blood CO2 level was simultaneously measured in 12 patients. The urinary CO2 level was higher than the blood CO2 level in 24 patients. The median value of the urinary CO2 level was 3.18mmol/L and the median of the blood CO2 level was 2.94mmol/L. The median of the CO2 level gap was 0.35mmol/L. All patients had gastrointestinal symptoms, such as vomiting, diarrhea, and nausea, and the median blood gas level at admission was 7.65mmol/L and the median serum creatinine level was 126μmol/L. Eleven patients recovered and 13 patients died. In the patients with stable COVID-19, the blood CO2 level was significantly higher than that in the patients with COVID-19 who died (p=0.000, one-way ANOVA). The patients with COVID-19 showed a urinary CO2 level higher than the blood CO2 level. Continuous monitoring of CO2 excretion provides a new and convenient method for the early detection of the disease.A unique curved blade knife produced by Chicco Knives from nautical brass.
