There's no stopping them, especially when it's a story about how much money Bart makes at the Kwik-E-Mart. Written by Dan Greaney, "MoneyBart" is very much an episode with many jokes that don't really add up to much. Most of them come from a few certain recurring characters, and the most funny ones seem to occur in the last couple of minutes. The episode begins with Bart wanting to be a famous rap star. So he gets his friend and rival Ralph Wiggum to write him a song and, with the help of Donny Osmond, record it. He wins first prize in a talent show and gets to use the money to buy presents for everyone at the Kwik-E-Mart. That's not exactly what he had in mind. Meanwhile, Marge's parents are worried about Lisa's relationship with James and David. This all leads to an awkward dinner with both families. It isn't the only awkward moment in the episode – there's also the brief introduction of a character who's meant to be a new main character. It's
