Suite ouverture des premiers mois de l'année, c'est "le ton" du président d'Automobiles de l'agglomération de Montréal (Aamco), Gilbert Levesque. Depuis le début du mois de février, l'ancien président de Québecor et Groupe TVA a fixé son premier objectif de l'année : « 2020, les gros boucs et les 30 milliards d'actifs à Québec. » À ses yeux, tout le monde doit devoir s'organiser pour valoriser le Québec et l'économie québécoise, c'est-à-dire multiplier l'écosystème. ÉDOUARD PECHER La Presse « Les Québécois ne doivent pas se sentir coupés, l'écosystème québécois doit être valorisé. C'est une priorité pour moi et on est en train de créer un plan B en fonction de ce que les Québécois veulent faire. C'est le beau débat. Le Québec est un pays différent, on doit l'expliquer par lui-même. » Rappelons que c'est dans ce contexte que le président de Québecor a annoncé le 10 janvier un transfert notable, de 13 millions $, de TVA en affaires, pour l'année 2020. En entrevue avec La Presse, M. Levesque soutient que les Québécois ont besoin de plus d'échanges entre eux, que les gens se rencontrent, que la langue française est valorisée, que nous, les Québécois, cherchons « à nous accorder un milliard de dollars en plus chaque année », que le Québec est un atout, et que ce commerce entre nous n'est pas connu du grand public. Dans cette entrevue, la spécificité du

What's New In?

Q: How do I get these surfaces to close in? I am new to Blender, and have been trying for a couple days to get these objects to close in. I have tried everything I can think of, including rearranging the array of vertices and adjusting the push and pull operations. Please be kind! A: You can use the "Paint Mode" brush with the following settings: The "Round Cap" brush starts out with a radius of 0, but you can enlarge it and then reduce it as you paint, to get the 2D shape you want. The "Blade", however, does not require much tuning: Tag Archive for 'Conversation' Today, personal relationships were thrust onto center stage in the media. It was all too obvious that nobody was willing to step forward and start the conversation. The traditional media is paralyzed, afraid to broach the subject and have an honest conversation with their readers, listeners, and viewers. Instead of discussing these issues, we see predictably one-sided, polarizing narratives being proffered by our society. A lot of the blame for this state of affairs rests squarely on our political and social leaders who have long prevaricated. Lying has become the norm, and we've now entered an era when politicians and their operatives can't even be believed and their statements need to be constantly vetted. "In August, 9,000 people will die of a preventable disease," the UK's chief medical officer recently declared. "In the same month, 60 million people will be prevented from accessing a GP." The only way to pull ourselves out of this is for us as a society to embrace the challenge and take a look at what it is that we're doing. The last few days have seen the sharing of the video "The Conversation: How to Talk about Sex," which started out as an online conversation between Australian Professor Meredith Williams and her interviewers, but reached further through the social media. It's a very powerful program. The opening questions were quite straight forward and focused. A few asked about the status of the conversation about sex — is it on the agenda of the public, government and health leaders? The answers were very different depending on country and region. Some said yes and others were very much, "no."
