vCard Importer is a program with a very self-explanatory name - it allows you to import contacts from a text file or vCard file. The interface of the application is based on a standard window with a simple layout divided into two panes - one for the list of contacts and one for inputting contact details. So, you can read the entire text file with the possibility to sort and filter it according to various fields, or search for a certain contact in it. You can also add contacts to the list, or select them with the use of checkboxes. In addition, you can modify or delete an entry, search for a contact in the list, enable vCard Importer to match cases, back up and restore the address book, as well as sort items in the list in an ascending or descending order. Apart from that, you can create a report from the entire contact list, or only selected entries, in order to print it or export it to HTML or RTF. Moreover, vCard Importer can convert your contacts to MS Outlook, iCalendar and vCalendar files. Finally, the app requires a small amount of CPU and system memory, has a good response time, and supports keyboard shortcuts. We have not experienced any issues during our testing; vCard Importer did not freeze, crash or pop up error dialogs. On the other hand, its features are quite limited, although we must keep in mind that the app has not been updated for a long time. vCard Importer Description: iXViz is a software that allows you to analyze the activity of any PC, laptop, tablet or smartphone. It may be connected to the network via LAN cable or be a stand-alone device. iXViz offers a variety of very intuitive reports that allow you to check the system's activity on a daily, weekly or monthly basis. You can monitor the RAM usage, CPU load and perform several analysis including disk usage, Wi-Fi signal strength, frequency of the device's use and battery life. There is a bonus of the app's "activity levels" – a graph on the smartphone that represents the fluctuations in the app's activity as a whole. iXViz allows you to view a list of recent program and file activities, as well as the number of USB devices attached to the computer. The program is extremely easy to use, but the controls may be a bit tricky for beginners. Apart from

Web Programming // Building Smart Cities Sometimes, you get a new task, such as a new project that needs lots of creative work. And sometimes, you get a single task that can just be done in hours, and will blow your mind. These tasks are the “a-ha!” moments. Today, I’m going to discuss one such moment for me, and why I decided to do it. I’ve been doing quite a bit of research into smart cities, and what one could potentially achieve if you combined IoT, machine learning, and the web. A lot of the tools, services, and platforms that exist for IoT and machine learning (think the Raspberry Pi, Google, AWS, etc.) are quite cumbersome, and are quite difficult to work with if you're not a programming or web developer. This left me with a bit of an unease, that unless I was able to find a way to break down that wall of complexity, I wasn't going to be able to do anything. I had to break through that wall in order to solve my problem. I'm not going to spend the rest of this post talking about my particular solution, as it's quite specialized to the project that I'm working on. What I will do is take you through the process that I went through, that would be useful to you if you had a project like this in mind, and hopefully, leave you with a small idea of how you might be able to solve it. The first thing you need to understand, before you can do anything, is that you're going to need some sort of a web framework. I've been working with PHP and Laravel for quite a few years now, but you should understand the concepts of how web servers work, how a web application is built, and what you should and shouldn't do. You also need to understand that we need to make the project multi-platform. I'm going to assume that you're using Windows, but the same applies to Linux, Mac
