It is released under the GNU General Public License. Keep track of content changes in the current buffer! Mark texts which have been modified by adding a unique marker to your content. Multiple languages support! Compatible with both Windows and Linux systems. This is a guide for keeping track of content changes in the current buffer. By following this guide you'll get a better understanding of the structure of your files, and you'll be able to analyze your changes in a more easy and clear way. The Guide The idea behind this plugin is to keep track of content changes in the current buffer, and provide a clean way of analyzing and visualizing them. It's usually useful to see the changes between versions of the same document. There are three main files in this plugin: DirtyGutter.java, DirtyGutterProvider.java and DirtyGutterIconProvider.java. When a new version of a text is introduced, DirtyGutter icon is added to the buffer. This folder contains the following files: DirtyGutter.java: This file is the plugin's core. It implements the abstract class DirtyGutterProvider. This allows you to implement this class in your own plugins. At the beginning of the methods of this file, a context item is created in order to register the changes in the buffer to this plugin. DirtyGutterIconProvider.java: This file contains the main logic of the plugin. Here, the CleanGutterIcon is created and, via its functions, the DirtyGutterIcon is added to the buffer. The functions of this file are as follows: insertChanges(File[] fileList) : This function inserts the DirtyGutter to a specific document. The "fileList" parameter is the list of files present in the current buffer. closeDirtyGutter() : This function removes the DirtyGutter from the current buffer. b7e8fdf5c8
