(Granted, they're probably not going to sign him until fall if he gets his grades up) I could see being concerned about the lack of depth. Using the #2 pick on a TE is a big gamble and would be risky for a team that doesn't have a running game to fall back on. It's unfortunate that they lack depth at WR. Where they could really use depth is at safety. As they have four safeties that all play best in a 4-3. Defensive coordinator Bob Gregory has played both 4-4 and 3-4 base systems but never a hybrid. This game is quite different than the one they played in the NFL last season and it will cause some issues for him. Regardless, I think it's the same thought as everyone else. They wouldn't want to sign up for a risk and then just roll the dice with that first round pick on a WR. Just make sure they can get him signed first. Where they could really use depth is at safety. Our run defense has been rough when we have the secondary in the game. We need better, faster, coverage guys to cover those big O linemen at running back. The added run support a secondary provides to our D-line is invaluable. I agree. The
