now that the majority of the teams publishing technology has shifted from wysiwyg to director, it would be nice if there was some similar similatities as there is an abundance of tools and platforms that work well with director. toon boom, animate, dreamworks animate, disney, and so on, all have their proprietary tools and layers work well with director and the applications of each industry i just listed (including fx houses, vfx houses, audio houses, and so on). it would be nice to see a combination work on the same platform (lume inside of media node, for example). so i thought i would share a tool i just discovered that is a free plug in that allows you to export your projects from storyboard pro to director. it takes care of a lot of the settings, timing and pan and zoom issues you might have, or even layer and image sequences that might be an issue with storyboard pro. again, the tool allows you to export over a single frame, or even 10 frames, something that earlier versions of storyboard pro wouldnt allow. and while i am not necessarily suggesting that storyboard pro should be depreciated (its an excellent tool), i would like to see options for storyboard pro users who want to transition to director. hey guys i just finished the learning phase of my apprenticeship and have moved on to the second stage. not much to do that i can remember. im in the middle of the editing process with what i have learned, so far so good. ive edited about a dozen shows from 2d to 3d, and im currently editing another series from scratch. which is why i was hoping you guys could help me with the next stage. this project, and to be honest most of my work as of lately is new series, toons, or whatever you want to call them. so a good deal of it is still very, very, very, basic. im looking for someone to teach me how to use the toon boom animation software, and then i just want to experiment and try new techniques, and see what works. i have used adobe media flow, and i have used the toon boom animation software, but i've never really been able to get a feel for what the software can do. so, if you need some help with the basics, you may have to start at the beginning. i've read on all the forums that it is much better to find a teacher than to have one find you, so im looking for that as well. my budget is limited as well, because i live on the verge of poverty, due to my hectic job. not many people would take the time to teach someone with no money, so i was hoping to find someone who would want to help me anyway. i will drop you a pm, and we can go from there. thanks for your time!
